About Flagpoles

U.S. made flagpoles sold by Bob's Flags and Banners are manufactured from aluminum, fiberglass, steel or wood. They can be ordered with either internal (hidden) or external (visible) halyards (ropes), and come with a top finial, rotating truck, snap hooks, halyards and cleats. Internal halyards have a locking access box and special internal hardware.

Residential flagpole kits are easily installed, and come with brackets or a ground sleeve, mechanical drawing and simple instructions. Most are generally installed by homeowners and can be easily displayed and taken down.

Flagpole height is measured from ground level; the height of the pole determines how large a flag it can fly. [Our website has flagpole height-to-flag size data that can be viewed by clicking on F.A.Q.'s and scrolling down to the fifth answer.] Greater pole height may be required to meet ground installation code requirements.

Shorter 5' to 20' poles are available in smaller diameters and consist of single or multiple sections. Poles 25' to 100' are quite sturdy, have thick walls and large diameters that taper bottom to top. Some larger flagpoles can fly up to three very large flags simultaneously.

Fiberglass poles are white and may be rigid or telescoping; aluminum poles come with Satin, Clear, Bronze or Black anodized finishes. Steel poles can be finished in almost any color. Nautical poles with mast, yardarm and gaff are almost always white, and come in single and double-pole versions, depending on height desired and size and types of flags to be flown.
